{audio}files/preroll.mp3;files/News_Audio/2012/sgrtmccorkle030512.mp3{/audio}

Will President Obama's record for strong political organization and clockwork campaigns have more impact on North Carolina Democratic candidates success than the candidates' own efforts? Political strategist now visiting Duke Professor Mac McCorkle thinks a strong Obama finish could make the difference for many state Democratic races. He and Exclusive Host Barlow Herget look at the state's political landscape and find Republicans in strong positions for Congress and the General Assembly.